Last year, I went to Vietnam on our school trip.

The first day, my class went to Culture Center. The other class went to the museum to learn history. I saw Áo dài, the traditional clothes of Vietnam. They were very beautiful. I took a lot of pictures there.

The next day, all the students visited a junior high school. When we went into a classroom, Vietnamese students sang a song for us. I didn't understand the meaning, but I liked the song. Then, we talked with them. We could not speak Vietnamese, but we enjoyed talking with them in English. I think

Around noon, we cooked traditional Vietnamese foods for lunch. Xuân, one of the Vietnamese students, helped me a lot. She was very kind. So, I said "Cám ơn," many times. I know just one Vietnamese word, "Cám ơn." It means "Thank you." But she said, "We are friends. Helping friends is not a special thing. You don't have to say 'Cám ơn' to me." I was surprised to hear that.

In Japan, we say "Thank you" when our friends help us. But in Vietnam, people think that helping each other is not special. If their friends say "Cám ơn," they feel they are not friends. So, they don't often say "Thank you," to their friends. It was interesting to me. Some Japanese people may get angry if they don't know about it. I think we need to learn about other cultures.

In the afternoon, we played some sports, like soccer, tennis and basketball. I like playing basketball very much. When we played basketball, I helped Xuân. She looked happy. Of course, ②she didn't say anything, and she just smiled.
